

Kirsty gets a Makeover

from her own wardrobe

By Kirsty Hilton

Two hours at home on a Saturday morning has given me a new wardrobe, some style know how and a newly found excitement for putting outfits together. Too easy!

I booked my wardrobe edit with Antoinette from All About Style in August. The first thing Antoinette did was some measurements. Not scary ones! It was all about balance, across my shoulders then shoulders to hips. It was after the measurements she could tell me the best length I should wear my jackets (oops I've been doing that wrong for 17 years!) as well as where I should wear belts and where to have my shirts end if I wore them out (I was on the right track there at least).

This is where it got interesting. I thought so anyway! Antoinette looked through my clothes and started to suggest that I try them on so she could see if they were the right cut/fit for my body shape. She was handing me skirt and top combinations from my wardrobe that I had never worn before. When a top was too loose and not showing my 'shape', she would grab a belt as well as pick out a pair of shoes that would look best (believe it or not I only have 6 or 7 pairs).

My mum thought the whole concept was quite interesting so she gravitated from the lounge in the other room to a chair closer to the 'action'.
